VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

The Consolidation of the Medical Schools

To the Editor of The Times-Dispatch: Sir,—The article by Dr. George Tucker Harrison on the proposed consolidation of the University of Virginia department with the Medical College of Virginia, which is printed in your columns on December 17, was so forceful and so eloquent in its appeal to the alumni of the university that it has no doubt called forth comment which has not been given. The prosperity of the medical education of both should be thoroughly discussed. The standard of medical education are both so vital to the people of Virginia that any question touching either or both should be thoroughly discussed.

As an alumnus of the university, though not of the medical department, I simply wish to ask if Dr. Harrison is not more influenced by simple unwillingness to change a state of things of long standing than by the reasons for and against the proposed consolidation. Dr. Harrison has never approached the question fairly as follows: He begins by protesting against the "radical movement," sums up the reasons for it as simply mercenary, and suggests that the one who advocates it is consenting against his will. This certainly sounds like the prejudice of a born conservative, of one to whom any change is per se a bad thing. And in his next words he removes all doubt. A good motto, "Let us have a quiet revolution." Let well enough alone. It is risky to embark on an unknown sea.

Again I want to insist that I cannot judge of the merits of the question from a technical medical point of view, and have no "made" opinion on the subject, but I can and do know that such a standpoint of blind inertia as that will never suffice in this any other question. That dogged devotion to Virginia that we have is once the pride of many Virginians, but it simply will not do nowadays. It drives those who really want to do what is right into the mistake of adopting changes too rashly, it may be.

In a community such as present day Virginia, striving on all hands for life and freedom, and aware of the rank growth of old abuses that must be removed, this purblind policy of "let well enough alone" is invidious. Good men who raise this cry forget that they are strengthening the hands of all the defendants of the fee system in State offices the law election laws and political apathy that make it possible for a candidate to become a Governor of Virginia without any opposition, and the horrible condition of illiteracy in Virginia, which the Legislature placidly accepts year after year. When everybody objects to a proposed change, it is not a score of things being "well enough alone," it is a feeling that he really means that, or is talking in his sleep. No body can look at the State of Virginia and think, without seeing that if it is risky to embark on an unknown sea, it is also risky to accept things as they are.

Now as for the proposition in particular, and Dr. Harrison's arguments against it. It is not true that the consolidation of the proposed medical school of the two medical schools, founded on the ground that there is not room in Virginia for two first rank schools of medicine; that the second rank schools are apparently doomed to a harder and harder struggle for existence; and that as a result of the advancement of scientific knowledge, no medical school can continue to turn out good practitioners that does not devolve to scientific research. It is not further true that the faculty of the medical department of the University of Virginia think that it is more feasible, when all the facts are considered, for the State to maintain such a medical school in Richmond, a city of 120,000 inhabitants, than in Charlottesville, a town of 7,000, and, moreover, has not this same faculty shown by its action in adding continuation to its requirements for matriculation and graduation an unflinching insistence on the necessity of research, that it is seeking efficiency and not mere numbers in its advocacy of the union of the schools?

Dr. Harrison quotes at length from Dr. Adams of Montreal and insists on the necessity of breadth in medical education. I think every man must agree that the ideal medical school is part and parcel of a great university for many faculties. But how to attain that in this case, that is, the very question. Certainly the medical students of the University of Virginia in the past were not studying under conditions that remotely approached the ideal for a medical school beyond the three R's—research, research, research, and a man might, and did often, graduate (sometimes in one year) without the remotest "education in and knowledge of humanity," beyond an anaesthetic
